About Conference

College is hosting this conference keeping in view that women cooperatives can not only bring prosperity to women but can help in the attainment of Sustainable Development Goals

The idea of cooperatives has always been closely tied to community solidarity, democratic participation and collective progress unlike profit driven corporations, cooperatives place human welfare at the center of economic activity. In societies marked by inequality, particularly gender in equality, cooperatives have played on instrumental role in opening doors for women. They have not only offered women access to credit and livelihoods but also created spaces where women can develop confidence, leadership and autonomy. Thus cooperatives are not simply economic organization, they are platforms for women's empowerment, social justice and inclusive development. One of the most profound contributions of cooperatives has been in the field of economic empowerment, women, particularly in rural areas, often lack access to land, capital and markets.
